Course: “The Political and Intellectual Foundations of China”

Version: 1.1

Date: 03/03/2016

Author: DCU Ontology Team

Aiming to imprint the research process on the NeDiMAH Methods Ontology, this document presents the scope and description of a case study of humanities research followed by snapshots of its actual modeling on the Excel template. This is to be used as example for modeling case studies in the context of the NeDiMAH Methods Ontology Workshop.

Use case Chatzidiakou2: “The Political and Intellectual Foundations of China”

This example is based on an online course offered through the EdX platform, which offers interactive online classes and MOOCs from universities all over the world, such as MITx, HarvardX, BerkeleyX, and UTx. The course used as our case here is provided by HarvardX and it is the first course of a series of mini courses called “ChinaX”.

The course, entitled “The Political and Intellectual Foundations of China”, provides an overview of the big issues in China’s history, and then looks back at the beginning of history and civilization in China. The history and archaeology of early China are discussed, and an introduction to the most notorious findings is made. The course introduces also the Chinese geography, the climate as well as the relation between the people and the geography in order to discuss identity, ethnicity and finally nationality in China, a notion that comes back in many disguises and begins with the distinction between the tribal peoples, the yidi, and the zhongguo, the members of the community. Additionally, the course explores the notion of “dynasty” as a ruling house, as an empire, but also as the rule of an imperial family. Thus the first political and religious structures of China are discussed, in order to further explore the legitimation of power in early China. This issue is closely linked to the early Chinese philosophy and the works of Confucius and the philosophers who came in his wake, such as Mencius and Xunzi.
